Haliburton's Injury Stuns Pacers

Just seven minutes into the game, the mood shifted dramatically. While driving aggressively to the basket, Haliburton collapsed without contact, clutching his right leg in visible agony. Replays showed the familiar and worrying signs of an Achilles injury. The 24-year-old guard was in tears as he limped off, unable to bear weight, drawing a standing ovation from the Oklahoma faithful and stunned silence from the Pacers bench. Reports suggest Haliburton may miss significant time next season – a heartbreaking blow for a player enjoying a career-defining playoff run.

A New Era Begins

A nine-point burst to start the fourth quarter opened the floodgates. The Thunder surged ahead by 22, and with just minutes remaining, the city of Oklahoma City could begin to celebrate. The final buzzer confirmed it: the Thunder are NBA Champions. Led by head coach Mark Daigneault, this young core of Gilgeous-Alexander, Holmgren, Williams, and Dort has defied expectations, crafting a modern NBA fairytale – from rebuilding franchise to champions in stunning fashion.

What's Next?

While celebrations erupt in Oklahoma, concerns loom over Indiana. Tyrese Haliburton's injury not only robbed the Pacers of their leader in the biggest game of the season, but may also define the early part of the 2025–26 season.
